Dear Friends,

We understand that the Navy is moving ahead with plans for sonar and explosives training that threaten to deafen, injure and even kill countless whales, dolphins and other marine mammals. Starting in 2014, the Navy will harass, injure or kill marine mammals more than 33 million times in both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans during its five years of testing and training with sonar and explosives. These alarming numbers come from the Navy itself.

Inflicting such tremendous harm on marine mammals is simply unacceptable. Entire populations of marine mammals will be affected. Navy ships will flood millions of square miles of ocean with high-intensity sonar, which is known to cause disorientation, hearing loss, stranding and death in whales. The Navy is supposed to be protecting people and mammals, not destroying them.

Please stop the killing and harming of our animal and human populations, and stop destroying the environment that these are dependent upon for their survival. Thank you for your attention.

Sincerely,

Don Timmerman
